Mandela and King: A Lesson for Martin Luther King, Jr. Day

By Bill Bliss

Nelson Mandela and Martin Luther King, Jr. never met and they lived at opposite ends of the world, but their paths of struggle for civil rights in South Africa and the United States intersect as two of the twentieth century's most important achievements in advancing human rights and freedom. As the holiday commemorating Dr. King approaches, it is a compelling time to consider the contributions of both of these extraordinary leaders.

A WebQuest

Here is an online research activity students can do to explore the lives and accomplishments of Martin Luther King, Jr. and Nelson Mandela. Students can work on their own or with a partner or small group to find the answers to these questions and then share as a class. Through this activity, they will discover some of the ways in which these two leaders had similar views and shared similar experiences during their remarkable lifetimes.

Online Resources

Before students go to their usual search engines to find answers for the WebQuest, encourage them to first explore some of the following primary web sources:

Martin Luther King, Jr. National Historic Site, Atlanta, Georgia

(The official site of the National Park Service)

<http://www.thekingcenter.org/>

The King Center (Library and Archives)

(The site includes a "dream map" and offers students an opportunity to add their dreams to the archive.)

<http://www.mandela.gov.za/>

South African official government site commemorating Nelson Mandela

(This site offers information about Mandela's life, a picture gallery, and links to videos.)

A Note on Dr. King and South Africa

Dr. King was invited to speak at universities and religious organizations in South Africa in 1966, but the government refused to grant him an entry visa. In December 1965, he called for the United States and other countries to boycott South Africa to protest its rulers and its policy of racial separation. This boycott and the struggle for change within South Africa eventually led to the end of the policy and the establishment of a new form of government.

Enrichment: Two "What-ifs"

What if Martin Luther King, Jr. had lived to the age of 95 as did Nelson Mandela? What do you think he would have accomplished? What might have been different in the United States in terms of civil rights? politics? society? (Have students share as a class.)

What if Martin Luther King, Jr. and Nelson Mandela met today? What would they talk about? What might they plan together? (Have students work in pairs to brainstorm and prepare a role-play to present to the class.)

Two Final Thoughts: Mandela and King on Education

"Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world."

Nelson Mandela

"The function of education is to teach one to think intensively and to think critically. Intelligence plus character — that is the goal of true education."
